The Pastor Speaks

"Behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague." Leviticus 13:13.

As strange as this regulation appears, yet there was wisdom in it, for the throwing out of the disease proved that the constitution was sound. It may be well for us to see the typical teaching of so singular a rule. We, too are lepers, and may read the law of the leper as applicable to ourselves. When a man sees himself to be altogether last and ruined, covered all over with the defilement of sin, and no part free from pollution; when he disclaims all righteousness of his own, and pleads guilty before the Lord, then is he clean through the blood of Jesus, and the grace of God. Hidden, unfelt, unconfessed sin is the true leprosy, but when sin is seen and felt, it has received its death blow, and the Lord looks with eyes of mercy upon the soul afflicted with it. Nothing is more deadly than self-righteousness, or more hopeful than contrition. We must confess that we are "nothing else but sin," for no confession short of this will be the whole truth, and if the Holy Spirit be at work with us, convincing us of sin, there will be no difficulty about making such an acknowledgment - it will spring spontaneously from our lips.

What comfort does the text afford to those under a deep sense of sin! Sin, mourned and confessed, however black and dirty, shall never shut a man out from the Lord Jesus. Whosoever comes unto Him. He will in no wise cast out. Though dishonest as the thief, though unchaste as the woman who was a sinner, though fierce as Saul, though cruel as Manasseh, though rebellious as the prodigal, the great heart of love will look upon the man who feels himself to have no soundness in him, and will pronounce him clean, when he trusts in Jesus. Come to Him, poor sinner.

Come needy, come guilty, come loathsome and bare;
You can't come to filthy - come just as you are.

Comment on the International Sunday School Lesson for Sunday, April 13, 1975.
Topic Man's Responsibility for Creation
Scripture: Genesis 1:26-31; Psalm 8

Thou hast given him dominion over the works of thy hands; thou has put all things under his feet. Psalm 8:6

In the Scriptural account of creation, we get the picture of God bringing into existance a place which will support life and in which life will flurish as a residence for the creature man. God made the world for man, but in making a place for man to live God also committed certain responsibilities to man. The Genesis account relates that God gave "dominion...over every living thing that moves upon the earth" and all plant life to the male and female He had created.

Psalm 8, attributed to David, repeats the Genesis declaration that God gave to man dominion over God's created works. As generations of people of Israel and still later generations of Christians sang this ancient hymn in their synagogues and churches, the concept of the Divine commitment of dominion over the earth to man has become an important feature of the Judeo-Christian tradition of man's relationship to God.

While dominion indicates control, it should not be identified or confused with absolute authority. In the Scriptural sense, the dominion which God gave to man and woman over the rest of His creation is a stewardship, in the ancient means of the term, or a trusteeship, as we might now term it. The steward was an overseer, charged with managing and administering the property for the owner's benefit. In the Scriptural presentation of the relation of the world to God, the world belongs to God; He is the owner. The ancient psalm,

"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and those who dwell therein," is echoed in the modern hymn, "This is my Father's world."

God gave to the make and female He created reproductive power and charged them to "fill the earth and subdue it." Subdue means to bring the earth under control and cultivate it and its resources; it does not mean to ravage it.

The dominion which God gave man involves man's responsibility for the world. He is to use the earth for God's glory and all humanity's-present and future-benefit. As God's overseer, it is man's responsibility to manage the earth so that it remains productive and fit for human and animal habitation. In some of His parables, Jesus brought out vividly this role of man as manager of this world for God.

That man has mistaken his role is obvious. He has mistakenly regarded dominion to mean that the earth belongs to him, to use as he chooses. Consequently man exploits the earth and its people, depletes earth's resources for his own profit and enjoyment, without regard for others who are already here and who are yet to live here. Such exploitation is an abuse of dominion, not truly dominion.

God made the world to support life, in order that it might be a fit home for man during his pilgrimage. In the management of earth and its resources, man has the responsibility to look out for those who come later. A few weeks ago, students of the International Sunday School Lessons were reminded, in the study of the Letter to the Hebrews, that people of faith "did not receive what was promised, since God had foreseen something better for us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect." In earthly affairs each generation is a link between past and future generations-neither the individual nor the generation lives apart from God's stewards each person's and tion's responsibi ter earth's affairs who come later deprived of reso for human bless Conservation Service soil loss plan conservation practices to keep soil losses within tolerable limits. Most soils can lose about 4 tons per acre per year and not deteriorate.

Many farmers have abandoned conventional conservation systems, such as contour strip cropping, terraces and grass waterways, in favor of cultivating whole fields with large equipment. The group visited several locations and computed soil losses for training purposes. Soil losses on land without the benefit of conservation systems had losses ranging from 25 to 49 tons per acre per year or losing an inch of soil every 3 to 6 years. Many are now renting land and farming it with no regard for conservation. Landowners can't tolerate these excessive losses.

Then too, erosion not only depletes our farmland but its by-product sediment, pollutes our streams. Sediment pollution or muddy water is the greatest pollution to our streams and water courses.

Soil losses can be kept within tolerable limits by planning and applying needed conservation systems and management practices. The Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District has given conservation planning a high priority. For conservation assistance contact the local office of the USDA Soil Conservation Services.
